Our people had a lot of dealings with him. He was the brains behind purchasing Datron and then IPO and run with the money of the shares."

HII knew of problems

Cyberlux deceived US government by stating their drones were EW proof, knowing this was fraudulent and untrue. The shipped them with Tarantas controllers and basic hobbist radio flight controllers. When they did testing Brett paid off EW crews to turn off jammers and allow the drone to make attack in LVIV demonstration. Training started in Poland and Ukrainians pilots from Unmanned systems forces 14th regiment were furious when they discovered these drones were being flown on basic hobbist flight channels with no EW protection. Larry had planned to contract out Orqa (Croatian company) to replace these radios with IRONGHOST protocol and make the attempt to switch the radios at facility in Texas before first 200 drones were shipped. Orqa provided the radios and were never paid by Cyberlux. Cyberlux never installed radios because they couldn't figure out the connection between tarantas and ironghost and ship a working product. At same time testing was being done in Norway with RadioNor and a successful test was done with GUR / Unmanned systems personnel of the CYBERLUX / RADIONOR version and was dubbed the "KX" version. It was very successful. However in a briefing with RadionNor Larry told RadioNor CEO he personally developed something cheaper and owned the new patented system (he was referring to IronGhost protocol from Orqa.) Mark Schmidt was briefed that the RadioNor addition with cost an extra $13k-$18k per drone and reduce to $500 per drone in 12-18 months and would solve their problem and end their fraud. This would cause production cost to be between $15k-$20k and reduce down to $2300 per drone within 18 months. Keep in mind these drones were sold to US GOV at $40k per drone and the profit margin would be huge while saving the company and resulting in much larger future sales. Mark Schmidt made the comment "that doesn't fit in our corporate profit plans" and decided to cancel the RadioNor solution. The RadioNor solution continued without Cyberlux and is wildly successful in Ukraine at a $500 cost as promised. The Cyberlux contract was placed on hold due to Cyberlux offering a tour of their facility to NSW CRANE US government employees. During this tour the NSW Crane personnel noticed and reported unsafe practices in manufacturing that included the fact their was no shielding on wiring that was in contact with the carbon fiber frames and feared any wiring could be conducted through frame and set off the explosive charge prematurely and injure US and Ukrainian personnel. An investigation was opened and the contract was placed on hold until it could be proved this was t a possibility. During this time Larry instructed the plant manufacturer to intentionally short circuit a K2 by grounding the frame to the power source and "electrify" it and send this to Ukraine to be tested. They failed to share this knowledge with their contracted personnel testing the drone in combat in Ukraine. During testing the personnel decided to not connect the explosive charge and do a test flight with the live explosives to verify its radio navigation. The drone malfunctioned in flight and crashed into an explosives storage site. By pure luck the charge didn't not go off as personnel had decided to not connect the explosive charge for a safety test. Upon inspection the drone was found to be "rigged" and the frame intentionally electrified. This caused a tense standoff with all senior Cyberlux staff, the manufacturing facility director and the contracted staff in Ukraine. Larry admitted he ordered the manufacturing facility to rig the drone and to conceal this fact. The manufacturing center director confirmed Larry insisted they do this, even though he objected because it could cause a premature detonation. It was shipped anyway. The Cyberlux CEO Mark, CTO Larry stated the Contractors were overreacting and this was an approved and risk mitigated scenario and nobody had perished so it was successful and they learned valuable lessons that were worth it. Shortly after 200 K2 drones arrived to the 14th regiment and failed certification and were removed from service and placed in storage. Cyberlux sent a new contractor, James (green beret) to conduct flight testing with 14th regiment and NATO parter forces. All testing failed and a drone lost control and crashed into a local river during testing. This was the end of Cyberlux in Ukraine and the final 1800 drones were denied acceptance and sit stored in Texas manufacturing facility.

He is the Albanian investor brought in from Bill Maadarini. He was their "CFO" and was the one planning the IPO and sell of Cyberlux as soon as the Dayton contract was secured. He stated "this whole program has one goal" IPO and cash out the shares as quickly as possible"

This is why everyone involved was offered millions on Cyberlux shares. Then Cyberlux kept deluting the shares and adding more to lower the value of each individual share but then issue millions more to Mark, Larry, Denis and Bill as they were to “ride away in the sunset” with all the investors money and dump the company on some hedge fund who buys it
